Published in Health Affairs, November/December 2006, Volume 25, Number 6

In this review, CHP/PCOR core faculty members Alain C. Enthoven and Victor R. Fuchs discuss the rise, stabilization, and decline of employment-based insurance, suggesting how the Medicare and Medicaid systems have inadvertently weakened political pressure for universal health coverage. Enthoven and Fuchs highlight the flaws of employment-based insurance and provide a purview into how employment-based insurance might be situated in the health care arena in the future.
